Relaxing at an end-of-year reception held at IU's School of Law on the Bloomington campus are most of the international students who have earned Master of Law (LL.M.) and Master of Comparative Law (M.C.L.) degrees from the school. This year's more than 20 international students from a dozen different countries were a wonderful, enthusiastic, and closely-knit group of students to work with, says Gene Shreve (seated), who acted as their faculty mentor throughout the year. These two graduate programs, as well as the advanced Doctor of Juridical Science (S.J.D.) program, are attracting increasing numbers of international students to the Law School.

Six IU Bloomington graduate students have won OIP international internships for Summer 1995. Left to right are Louise Williamson (Meridian House International); Hamidou Boukary (UNICEF Education Cluster); Amanda Carlson (Smithsonian Institution); Cathleen Cochrane (USAID Bureau for Latin America & the Caribbean); Sandra Stacki (UNICEF Education Cluster); and Kimberly King (American Council on Education).

Mr. Mohd Azmi Ab. Rahman (center), a student adviser of Petroliam Nasional Berhad (PETRONAS), Malaysia, visited the Bloomington campus to confer with M. Jo Terkhorn, Associate Director of IU's Malaysia Cooperative Program, and OIP Associate Dean Charles Reafsnyder, regarding pre-academic training and placement for 10 sponsored students.
